What is distinctive and particular about Christianity? How can we be faithful to that uniqueness whilst being genuinely open to others in a world of many faiths and belief systems?

In this day conference we will be exploring these and other questions through the doctrine of the resurrection of Jesus Christ: each of the resurrection encounters in the Gospels offers disruption and destabilization of human life – its routines, expectations, disappointments and its grief. Thus, the doctrine of the resurrection is a useful means of engaging with the disruptive tendency that is at the very heart of interreligious dialogue: for to engage in dialogue is to engage in a disruptive paradox – to engage with the world as it is and yet seeking to disrupt it by seeking reconciliation and the end of hatred and violence.
